For many of us, January and February can bring less-than-favorable flying weather, with winter storms bringing cold and possible icing conditions. But it's the perfect time to plan out some fantastic new flying adventures for the year - and you may find that flying to some recreational airstrips is just the ticket to expand your aviation horizons!

Understanding more about the unique characteristics of these special destinations, many on private land, will help you get the most from your experience, as well as help ensure their use for future generations.

In this webinar, Mike Purpura, Illinois State Liaison for the Recreational Aviation Foundation, will provide some valuable insight on the public/private partnerships that are the heart of recreational flying, what that means in terms of Codes of Conduct and Safety Briefings for pilots, and Guides for Private Airstrip Owners.

So bring your warm beverage of choice, have a seat, and start planning your 'fun flying' schedule with this informational webinar!

After registering, you will receive a confirmation email containing information about joining the webinar.

Much appreciated if you could please share with any pilots, CFIs, flight schools, Flight department managers to spread the word.

Thanks, Nina

Note from Ann Chandler

Ann Chandler is a longtime ENE member from Vermont. She recently sent a note that read, in part:

"... I sure do miss the air and having the Citabria do it's stuff! Sure enjoyed flying with my George. We enjoyed our lives flying. Mountain flying was great. ... So far, our winter has been little snow [as of February 5]

Just a reminder:

but the mountain tops and skiing have been good. ... Will be 95 next month and gardening is on my mind now! Happy flying! Hi to the girls."
If anyone would like Ann's address, let me know. I'm sure she would love to hear from fellow 99s.
